By David Westrom

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Who is more capable of determining what should be done with your money: you or the government? This is the simple question that author David Westrom uses to center the debate on a larger, even more universal national question: what role should the government have in the economy? Born not from years of being a cog in the machine-or even a ghost in the machine-but from concern as a citizen tired of the endlessly overcomplicated debate, Westrom streamlines the issue into a single, understandable concept. Using this fundamental baseline as a touchstone, he takes a well thought out journey into the role of government. He explores and challenges the underlying beliefs, logic, and thought processes that form the basis of a position that advocates a continued expansion of the role of government in the economy. He refers to this position as Big Government Love . Westrom presents a cogent argument that delivers new possibilities for the financial ills we face as we run headlong into the twenty-first century. Westrom s simplified approach is an eye opening and thought provoking treatise...
