According to data taken from The US Census, The Aggregate Revolving Consumer Debt Survey and The Survey of Consumer Finances, 160,000,000 Americans possess credit cards, which is just over half the population of America! More amazingly still, the average credit card debt of $7,219 per household in 2010! So, if you are feeling pinned down by credit card debt, you are certainly not alone! The average indebted American is now poorer than their 1980 counterparts! And this isn't just an American problem; rather it's a global problem! Since the end of world war two there has been a consistent push on behalf of the financial sector to push loan facilities, credit cards and all sort of other debts down our throats. We have become a debt based society and even though the 2008 financial meltdown demonstrated the flaws in this system, mousing really changes as the world economy is based upon debt. While there isn't much that any of us can individually do for the world economy we can step...
