Excerpt from Progressive Medicine, Vol. 16: A Quarterly Digest of Advances, Discoveries and Improvements in the Medical and Surgical Sciences; September 1, 1914 The Earliest Seat of Pulmonary Infections. From extensive radio graphic observations of a mottling, radiating from the root of the lung, as the first and truly diagnostic sign, Alfred C. Jordan<sup>2</sup> derives the conviction that the disease starts as a diffuse bronchial catarrh, with secondary lymphatic implication, prior to any apical settlement; the bacilli raising small foci of leukocytic infiltration along the bronchial tree. Similar appearances in the healthy suggest some obsolete former infection. This is a bold pathological proposition which doubtless will be submitted to searching clinical criticism.
