It would be supposed that such comfort in heating would spread with rapidity through all the cold and temperate climates, but such has not been the case, for, outside of the United States and England, the progress has been slow. In most of the cities of Europe, and, indeed, throughout the continent, the people cling tenaciously to the old style of trie stoves for burning wood or coal, which, although the heat yielded is pleasant, ate very cumbrous and expensive. In parts of Europe and Asia, where it would be supposed that means of heating are very requisite, scarcely any attention is paid to a subject so important. In Spain and Italy, until quite recently, no preparation would be made for heating in winter, except a dish of burning...
