And yet without the parents co-operation our schoolmasters can do little or nothing. Our only hope, then, is to make the parents in some way see that education will bring present advantage with it, of a sort that they can appreciate; that it will pay well to send their children to school; that it will bring them into favourable notice, and so help to procure for them good situations when they leave school. These are the arguments that they can understand, and it is of these that we must avail ourselves in dealing with such people. I confidently hope that the Weaver prizes may be of good service in this direction; and that it..
